

12 hours ago

Many of you have seen my posts about restoring Common Law, and stating that this is perhaps the only peaceful way back in putting the American People back in charge of the ONLY LAWFUL system of justice. In response to many of the articles we read on Zero, I have stated that "a return to Common Law would fix this". And, "The only people opposed to a restoration of Common Law are those with something to hide" (outside Constitutional protections as to privacy). In light of these statements, I offer this article which, for some reason, has not made its way to Zero. I would also state that I have personally seen Circuit "courts" (which are mere extensions of "Federal" courts) stopped in their tracks with the introduction of a Motion in Common Law. I have also seen "Federal District Courts" deny the Constitutionally guaranteed right to Common Law.

<https://thefederalist.com/2025/05/13/donald-trump-just-made-it-harder-to-go-to-federal-prison/>

PREMIUM

10 hours ago

Thank you for the link. Need more awareness of statutory color of law legal fictions, jurisdiction, courts, how rights are ceded for priveleges / registrations / licenses and of course (($taxes$)). Of course I'm taking "strict liability" and making a statement that goes: "Why am I compelled to sign up for Selective Service / Social Security / get vaccinated to go to kindergarten, have parents swear affiant documentation against their children or it's "illegal / abuse / neglect"... Hell, there's no such thing as informed consent in the medical field... in what's in our food / pharma... expect the federal government to support and defend your Constitutional rights?

This is a jaw dropping holy-* moment in the course of limiting federal government overreach (tyranny) that has a loooong way to go.

Just look at the legal definition of title 26 US Citizen. That will blow your mind. In some perfect world there would be people on this like there's open source software to the proprietary Federal Government statutory  code that effects everyone, right down to their domicile.

Fact is, state / city / local / HOA love this statutory flex over their citizens. Right down to the policies stated in a rental agreement. Everyone wants to get up in your business. Every EULA. Every mouse click. Every comment. Every purchase. Every door you darken when shopping. All your data.

It's impossible to just be a man or a woman. Human beings are living souls and they're pretty awesome until you vaxx them up, stress them out, wear them down, break them apart, and reward them for being docile and insipid. Why we're reminded every moment we're alive that the state is in charge, the telephone man is not tapping you, the mailman is your friend, and to shut up and pay your taxes.

Oh, and the police are there to protect you. The fact is that law abiding folks don't even own their own property. Take FRNs or Social Security or home ownership and we're taxed on unrealized gains whether it's direct or indirect or inflation... it's all of it: all. the. time. Like, compulsory schooling blows smoke up your kids'  all day, feeds them trash, makes them function at the worst times and it's all done to not create thinkers, lawyers, doctors, academicians, it's to crank out service industry morons who can put up with AC/DC juvenile rock , play fantasy football, get tattoos and fight their stepdads. Or whatever. Harrison Bergeron. Even my insurance company wants to tap my phone to see how I'm driving. But I have to have insurance. I can't afford a bond.

If we as a nation could only re-prioritize some basic stuff, like common sense, property, individualism, PRIVACY, and merit we would have the greatest nation on earth ^3. But we're ground into pabulum and mediocrity when we're dragged down by statutes, regulations, taxes, and identity.

When Trump says for every new regulation we're gonna repeal 10 or 100 regulations that's a good thing. It's a start. Fact is, it's none of anyone's business if say, my child is vaccinated. It's a HIPPA violation to even ask. But... people are so stupid they're like, yeah! Vaxx up muh kids! I've seen mommies bragging about it and telling me about this * totally unsolicited. That * should be illegal. And abortion should be illegal.

"Hi. How are you?"

"I just vaxxed up muh kids with aborted fetal tissue from a dead aborted little boy that has been an active ingredient in vaccines for over 30 years and daddy voted for Trump and I'm schizophrenic!"

Ok, then.

"Yeah, but I'm such a good mom. I'm the best mom. I took my kids and vaxxed them and then when it's time I'm going to transition them. And then... I'm going to get a divorce!"

And again, Ok.

"Yeah, and then after I  leave it will be like I'm free of all of this toxic masculinity and the world will be safer because I vaxxed the * out of my kids, cut off their reproductive capacity, made them pretty, and said, I earned this!"

Our entire system is warped. It all begins with "my body, my choice". But we don't even own our own bodies. How can anyone today say that? We don't live where we live, we don't have privacy or primacy over our own children, we live in some kind of existential backwardation waiting for the government to give us permission to do something, and hollywood movies suck . It's like, they're not even trying when the Biden Step Children Illegal Alien Animals just want their hotel rooms and cable TV and phones and to be told when to vote and where and Seth Rich some folks.

Our wild eyed federal government has overreached on us to the extent that you don't need frequent flier miles and Senators like Fetterman who won't buckle a seatbelt to air drop illegal enemy combatants but for the judges to step in like they own this country.

Every day I see common law statements talking about lamp posts and ropes. All of which are essentially a 2A argument pointing up public infrastructure.

God help us all as a Nation WWG1WGA