

Why Are They Drugging The Students?

BY TYLER DURDEN

SUNDAY, MAY 26, 2024 - 12:25 PM

Authored by Jeffrey A. Tucker via The Epoch Times (emphasis ours),

The last few years have blown wide open a scandal that has long existed but is not that well known aside from specialists. The problem is the collaboration between pharmaceutical companies, government regulators, and the medical industry. The problem is so vast that it is hardly describable in a short article.

(joel bubble ben/Shutterstock)

It turns out that the ineffective COVID shots were just the beginning. As far as we know and have discovered in the course of investigations, the shot was developed quickly as a countermeasure to distract from the problem of a lab leak. The world's population was held hostage for a year and more while the inoculation was rolled out. But once deployed, it became obvious that it could not actually block infection or stop the spread. So everyone got the bug anyway, and we are left with tremendous damage caused by the shots themselves.

I described this short history to Dr. Drew Pinsky, the famed addiction doctor who now has a popular video podcast. He found no fault with my scenario as mapped above. He immediately added that this has many parallels with the opioid crisis that led him into public advocacy. The pharma companies advertised some miracle drugs to fix pain with no risk of addiction.

The frenzy to prescribe was so intense that some doctors even feared penalties for not prescribing. The result of course was a disastrous addiction crisis that continues to this day. Unlike vaccine companies, the producers were not indemnified against payouts for harms, and as much as $50 billion ended up going to victims just last year. The numbers are mind-boggling.

Just when you think you have reached the bottom of this problem, new information comes along.

Last night I was privileged to attend a talk by Sheila Matthews-Gallo who founded AbleChild, an organization that advocates for child rights against forced medicalization. Why would such a thing be needed? As it turns out, many if not most kids in public schools today face this threat daily. They can be identified as having ADHD or Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder.

It turns out that there is nothing proven chemically to constitute ADHD. It is entirely a diagnosis applied based on behavior as identified throughout a checklist questionnaire. The checklist is about fidgeting, forgetting, boredom, finishing tasks, various acting up, expressions of frustrations, and so on. In other words, what we have here is a list of all the signs you might expect when boys in particular are told to sit perfectly still at a desk for months and years and complete tasks assigned to them by some authority figure.

With this kind of diagnosis, you are likely to rope in a vast number of kids, particularly the exceptional ones and those once considered to be “gifted and talented.” As it turns out, there is a vast industry working today to pathologize perfectly normal behavioral traits. It hits boys in particular very hard because, in general, they mature more slowly than girls and tend toward behavioral resistance to environmental adaptivity relative to girls.

For more on this amazing reality, see “The ADHD Fraud,” an eye-opening book.

What could be the purpose of such a diagnosis? You guessed it: there are drugs for this supposed problem. They have various names: Ritalin (methylphenidate), Adderall (amphetamine), Dexmethylphenidate, Lisdexamfetamine, Clonidine, and Atomoxetine. Not even one of them has been proven to be a chemical fix for any biological abnormality. They are all behavioral-adjustment drugs; that is, psychotropic drugs; that is, narcotics for kids.

Millions of kids take them, as many as 13 percent of teens. The rate grows higher in the college population. Some one in three adults are taking psychiatric meds. It’s getting worse. It starts in school.

Listening to all of this, I found myself astounded. And yet, in some ways, it fits with everything else we know. We have an industry here that is in a tight working relationship with government institutions like public schools, plus regulators, plus medical authorities that are throwing drugs at people with the promise of miracles but with results that actually ruin lives.

Think of how different your school years would have been if you had developed a drug addiction and lived off psychotropic meds from the age of 7. I was fortunately spared such a fate. But millions of kids today cannot say the same. It’s utterly astonishing. It strikes me that this is a scandal just waiting to be blown wide open.

Among the related factors, as RFK, Jr. has been pointing out in public lately, is the odd relationship between school shootings and the wide distribution of these drugs. Many cases we know about already but the medical records of others are being withheld, even though the public is more and more understanding that the real problem is not guns but pharmacological products. And yet the activists themselves are entirely focused on taking away guns rather than looking more deeply.

I have had personal experience with young adults who are addicted to Adderall. In many ways, when you are a college student, it seems like a miracle drug. In college, discipline over the use of time recedes into a low priority. Instead the demand is to turn in long papers on deadline, memorize vast material you can spit out on a test and forget the next day, and otherwise stay intensely focused sporadically. For many students, this drug is exactly what the doctor ordered: it permits hyper-focused all-nighters followed by a day or two of feeling like a zombie but no one notices.

I've known many people who develop addictions, not only physical ones but psychological ones: life without the drug seems dull by comparison and who wants that? These students carry this over into professional life and attempt the same pattern. They can work all day and stay up all night and achieve something that seems mind-blowing but not quite what you asked for. You ask for fixes and they don't happen. In fact, you don't hear from them for days after until they reemerge with no memory of the work they did. This pattern repeats itself.

I gradually came to learn that the real problem was the drugs. I concluded that I would rather have a moderately productive employee who at least had a steady pattern of labor and a mild recall of skills that could be built up over time. The issue is that when hiring someone, it's not quite kosher to ask such questions as: what drugs do you take? You end up guessing, and sometimes guessing wrong.

I'm telling you from long experience that these drugs are a catastrophe for professional life. No one should ever take them. That's my considered opinion in any case, and I frequently warn college students against them. And what's true for college kids is thousands of times more so for high school and grade school. It's a complete scandal that these drugs are given out like candy to school kids. Parents have every right and obligation to resist.

It's all the more astonishing to learn, as I did last night, that there never was any science to the diagnosis of ADHD, any more than there was any science behind social distancing. It's all made up to service the state and its adjacent players in the private sector who benefit from various mandates that somehow always end in drugging the population. The whole thing astounds me.

Think about the bigger picture. We've created these public schools, force the kids to attend them, ban them from any remunerative work, shove boys and girls together, impose uniform curricula as if every student learns at the same pace, take away discretion from teachers, and saddle the institutions with massive bureaucracies. When the kids don't take well to the environment, we call them mentally ill and drug them up in ways from which state-connected pharma companies can profit.

This level of cruelty is really baked into the system. It's a wonder any civilized society could ever accept it. And once you discover the fullness of the scandal about what's going on, you have to start asking other questions about weight-loss drugs, other vaccines and miracle cures, and the entire machinery of allopathic medicine itself. Yes, the rabbit hole is very deep.

It's predicted in Ted Kaczynski's manifesto.

It wasn't right for Ted to have done what he did, but he was highly intelligent and saw this stuff coming decades ago. Plus MK Ultra scientists fried his brain with LSD as a student.

He said they would eventually construct a way of life so technocratic and hostile to human nature, that people would have to be drugged into compliance. That's where we are.

It's not normal to put a child away from mom and dad in an artificially lit room for 8 hours a day for the majority of its prime years. It is a direct assault on the child's quality of life. That's not even getting into the vaccine schedule. Anyone who thinks the education system is normal is an emotionally deadened moron. It's horrific what we are doing to our children, the lights of the world, the future of our species.

That's what these pills are mostly used for: to drug otherwise healthy, thinking, feeling beings into complying with "modern life," which is in truth a highly organized, "economically efficient" path to death.

My wife had this experience with benzodiazepines. She started taking it for anxiety and sleep, she got progressively worse over the next 6 months. Her doctor told her it was the 'disease progressing.' Then we found out the prescribing guidelines for benzos say 4-6 weeks max.

Through the Benzodiazepine Information Coalition we were able to connect with a taper coach who has helped her taper off. It's been a long road, she could only tolerate 2% reduction per week. She slowly started to get better as she came off the drug.

Doctors have no clue about the pills they hand out. They are glorified drug salespeople. Don't take pharma for anything that's not life threatening, it can ruin your life.

Benzodiazepines worsen anxiety considerably. They do so by the same mechanism as alcohol: they are gabanergic, meaning they act on the GABA receptors, and thus attenuate neurological signaling activity. This is the same mechanism by which alcohol makes you sluggish, relaxed and mellowed out.

While the GABA receptors are occupied, the signaling between neurons is weaker and, since anxiety is nothing but increased nerve activity, this occupation of the GABA receptors by the benzos initially results in the anxiety dissolving away. So the benzos initially work because of this GABA receptor occupation.

The problem is that once the benzo medication/alcohol wears off, all of the neurotransmitters that were building up while the GABA receptor was blocked now come flooding in on it. This sudden transition from low nerve activity to extremely high nerve activity results in sensations of anxiety that are far worse than the initial anxiety.

As a result, the patient turns back to the benzos or begins drinking to achieve the GABA-blocking effect again. And of course, you build up tolerance and start needing more of the **** to get the same effect.

Benzos are just as dangerous as an alcohol addiction in that you cannot quit them cold-turkey after being on them for a long time, because it can cause muscle spasms and heart flutters. The withdrawal can literally kill you. So many people find themselves hooked for years or worse. And these pills lead to many suicides. People kill themselves because the anxiety reaches a point that they will do anything to make it stop.

I like to imagine there is a special place in Hell for the "medical professionals" who acquire Porshes and beachfront property by preying upon those who are already miserable and seeking help. And I can only hope that they exit this world in a horrific manner. Something like a Columbian neck tie. They are part of the problem, and in no way a part of the solution.

Hope your wife is doing better these days.

Why are they drugging students?

They are not, their misinformed parents are.

I was extreemly hyperactive as a kid cause by too much caffeen and too much sugar but luckily ADHD was not a thing in my time and I escaped being drugged by my mother who by the way would have insisted I take the medicine had it been available.

Its called greed. Greed so severe that it cancels any remnants of the conscience.

"..the ineffective COVID shots were just the beginning"

So injections were all good before this revelation? I have no reason to believe such a story. Example of the unnecessary mass injections for smallpox creating an outbreak that would otherwise have never occurred. No injections have been fully tested before being approved. None. Not ever.

Cannot confirm your statement above but can report that wikipedia mentions the average time for a vaccine to be approved for use is 10.5 years and only 6% of the approved vaccines remain on the market after their initial release. So even after approval the failure rate of vaccines is 94%

to trump, putin, and xi, i say if you do not wish to politicize the issue, you should quietly remove from life the perpetrators and obliquely help the cognoscenti understand that the truth is known and such actions will never be accepted by leaders of people.

humanity, you have been dealt a disservice by your leaders. your genome is polluted, your societies are overturned, your future has been rendered into shreds, your trajectory has been grounded, and your leaders continue to dissemble and plot against you. i resent being a member of this mundane, deplorably stupid human public. fix yourselves, humans, improve. you are contemptible.

It wasn't because she wanted to rape me... Ms. J

Instead? it was because she was one of the administrators of one of those IQ tests...

Well, yeah, that... & also because just before I hid behind the chalkboard of her science class just after lunch, and scared the bejeezus out of her as she was sliding the chalkboards... Much to the delight of the classmates...

Back in that room she was beside herself... She asked me if I had any idea of my IQ... & why I should APPLY MYSELF TO LEARNING... I said NO & I didn't care... Nor do I even care now...

She told me it was 185...

I really didn't give a FF and still don't...

I was able to make use of my high IQ by getting away from the education system. I worked, traveled the world, became fluent in languages by self-teaching, and devoured books on everything that had interested me but from which the public education system, with its incessant mindless busy work and exam writing, had prevented me from exploring. I eventually returned home and acquired degrees in physics and economics with a 3.95 GPA after having self-taught myself most of it from the books I'd read. All I needed was time, money, a roof over my head and the interest.

It's amazing what human beings can accomplish (to the benefit of themselves and to society) when you stop treating them like cattle, leave them alone, and allow them to pursue things they're genuinely passionate about. The education system does the opposite: it takes initially creative, hungry minds and exhausts them, ruins them. It's partially responsible for the collapse of society that we're witnessing now.

Mostly the boys and the odd Tomboy. Feminist teachers (both genders) unable to relate to young boys trying to teach them like a girl or using material that will not spark the young male's imagination. I know it sounds old fashion but a boys brain is wired differently from a girl. I know mine was in the 60's. You have to approach it as two separate challenges. It's not one recipe for all. Often teachers will just send the work home for the parents to deal with it then they get upset when the child is failing.

I was asked to teach Sunday school and reluctantly consented. I was given material to teach and walked into class. 10 boys. There was no way I was going to hold the attention of 5-8 year old boys in a classroom for 1 1/2 hours so I improvised. We made biblical weapons of war out of things we found in the classroom and did reenactments. Swords, shields at first. Between classes I researched trebuchets and catapults and we did those too. Parents told me they were astounded their boys looked forward to Sunday school every week! They used to hate it! I decided not to tell them the truth because I would have been canned and I was actually having a good time seeing how happy they were.

I used to train stallions so I'm used to the nature of male energy. It has lots of forward movement and cannot be comfortably contained. If you want to have an intense conversation with a man, do so while hiking strenuously. Don't sit with him, place a coffee on a doily and expect him to converse like a woman. Also don't look directly into their eyes which many men find offensive and threatening. And don't shame. just my 2 cents.

I'm an adult. I work with an adult with "ADHD" who is on adderall.

This person is at an 11 or 0, is incapable, apparently, of improvisation. To really see what a small swimming pool this tadpole lives in is dark. It's one of those "I live under a rain cloud" people. These people bring that with them and everyone suffers.

Some days I leave work with heart palpitations trying to figure out how someone could be so control-talking, so off base, so in my personal space, so disrespectful, and so insecure, girl boss pretend otherwise to have any other function than a robotic prosthesis of "literally" nothing but derp wax and a vagina that no one ever, ever at the end of the world could possibly want. I guess that's dane bramage. I see parapalegic women that melt my heart for the fact that they have so much inner strength, being led by others outside on a day trip. And I'd bet that psychologically they are a lot stronger than any emotional cripple who's been enabled to basically become another vanilla insouciant fake hunger artist who cares more about their black hair dye, bangs, Michigan bought cannibis discount, paid rent, and dumb **** complexes that are made up over any excuse.

So when I ponder this medical industrial complex I say let them eat cake.

Playing up some full on excuse over having a physical handicap is not a thing I respect, especially when you're on every pharma drug from speed to antidepressants, get a tit reduction, glamp on like life is so hard, can't work 3 hours and then I don't cry when you made 10 bucks a week over medicare and got kicked out of your insurance that I pay for without so much as an honest "good morning".

The obvious answer for adult trash is to get a lawyer and go on social security disability and stay the **** out of the way of people who are trying to make a living who aren't fake.

People like myself who donate generously to the alliteration society and have two or more astigmatisms. God damn.

My dentist, master top 5% and AWAKE (goes to holistic conferences w Mercola, etc.) and I discussed this problem last month at a cleaning.

He is aware now that the anethetics are contaminated. Told me to go do some protocols and until he can source uncontaminated he is using STRONG MAGNETS and only taking the top 25% of the vial for use.

Most children I have known who have been put on adderall and similar drugs for behavoir issues, turn into adults with the emotional maturity of the age they were when they went on the drugs. Only when they are adults and get off of the drugs and have a real support group (generally a church with church elders to listen to their problems and to give them advice and follow up with them), do they start slowly maturing. Many go from 5 year old mentalities (complete with crying tantrums) at age 18 to teenage mentalities by age 25... if they stay in the church, within about 15 years, their emotional maturity finally catches up with their actual calendar ages.

I learned this about 1998 to 2002, when two such ADHD diagnosed people who were now adults separately joined out church before the founding pastor died. The woman was about 25-30, the man about 18-20. The woman, while she still has some problems (mostly health issues) is happily married for the past decade and has worked for the past 20 or so years. The young man, went from a person living on govt subsidies, still on the govt drugs at the start of coming to the church, started improving and maturing after several years, but then decided it was easier for him to go back to govt subsidies and playing video games... he really did not want to have to actually work and be responsible for himself... He was the one who most often had the tantrums.

In both cases it was the fact that they could not keep quiet for hours on end that got them on the adderal treatment. I also know a young woman in college who was suffering from a poor diet and thyroid issues (her blood sugar would drop dangerously low within 30 minutes of a meal and stay at that point for hours...). The college prescribed her adderall as well, which almost killed her. What she needed was a low carb diet... she was taught that she needed lots of carbs for energy and that Gatoraid was good for her... and that was what she was living on.

“For every complex problem there is a simple solution ...and it is wrong. “ -H.L. Mencken

If you believe a pill exists that will solve a complex behavioral problem, you are delusional. Parenting well is incredibly difficult and exhausting. There is no easy way out. If you don't know how and when to discipline a child, you shouldn't be around them.

Is anyone surprised that groups of all parties involved - lazy and/or foolish parents, public educators (aka government bureaucrats), child psychiatrists (who don't want to spend 10-20 years trying to do things the hard way), and Big Pharma ($$$) all advocate for the quick and easy solution? How did hundreds of generations of functioning people make it thru the majority of human history prior to these drugs?

We had an issue with a teacher when my son was in 4th grade. She called us to the school for a "meeting" and I went by myself as spouse could not attend. I get there and there was 3 women and me (his main teacher, music teacher, and school counselor). They were telling me my son should be evaluated by a doctor because during music class he would blurt things out and get "goofy".

You have to be careful of these people, make sure not to react in anger or give anything away about your child's behavior at home (which has always been exemplary). They are just watching you closely for any indication they can use against the child.

I asked for more specific examples of why he should be evaluated besides Music class. They kept changing subject and never had any examples. The Teacher was just mad because our son was bored and fidgety sitting in their boring classes. At the end of the meeting I thanked them for their recommendations but made NO indication whatsoever I would do as they were demanding (and we never did!!).

They just sat there not knowing what to do. You just don't want them to suck you in to their ***** game!.

The next year he had a male teacher whom he loved. No problems at all.

This is a question I have had but found no data.

What percentage of kids pushed to take ADHD drugs are White.

It seems if a White kid is just over active and full of energy they (especially if the kid is a White boy) are made to take the drugs. The kid does not even have to be confrontational or "bad", just so full of energy that he has problems sitting still.

Yet, the black kids can do Much worse, be confrontational, refuse to stay seated or be quiet, start all sorts of trouble - and they do not seem to be forced to take the drugs. If they treated them like White boys then 85% of the blacks would be on the ADHD drugs.

In kindergarten, I was repeatedly taken aside and given IQ tests (and other strange tests) in a dark room while wearing headphones. TPTB wanted to put me in a supposedly special school for gifted and talented. They discussed it at length with my parents. Ultimately, my parents decided that there was something very odd about the whole program and enrolled me at a parochial school, run by old school nuns.

Throughout my entire grade schooling, the nuns taught me and Billy B. separately from the class, and we were allowed to proceed through the material at our own pace. We zoomed! We competed with and encouraged each other.

I am grateful to the nuns for what they did.

My mom sent my brother and I to a parochial school for one year (my fourth grade, my brother's 2nd grade). I never felt stifled in questioning authority by demanding empirical data to accept the validity of theories and hypothesis, which became problematic for some of the nuns, so when I returned to public school the next year I found we were covering stuff I'd already had the year earlier. From then on every day in class, for the rest of my 8 years in public school, I was reading the next day's assignments and doing that homework in class, and the teachers would think they caught me not paying attention to the day's lesson, except I almost always answered the question they asked correctly (even if I had to ask them to repeat it because, well, I wasn't paying attention, actually, I was doing that night's homework assignment). Never took homework home..

As it turned out I discovered speed (amphetamine) the middle of my jr year of high school, my first "recreational" drug.. I liked it.. But as I look back it really didn't help school at all. I graduated high school with decent grades in spite of it. I "burnt out" near the end of my sr. year, passed out going to pick up my girl friend after morning water-polo practice before our first classes and crashed my 1959 Volvo B-18 into the back of a 1962 Pontiac Super-Tank parked a block down the street from her house, and decided the "whites" were really not my friend after all.

Adderall came out 20 some years later, and I just shook my head..

The headphones may have been hearing tests. If you showed any sign of speech or language problems the first thing they rule out is hearing problems (and yes, you can have high IQ with disabilities). I was in six different state's gifted programs, went to multiple special gifted schools, hearing tested multiple times and never saw anything unusual (limited sample size but we are using anecdotal evidence).

I agree with allowing students to work at their own pace. We homeschooled most years until high school. I stopped teaching my son math in 7th grade because I felt like he was ready for calculus and I wanted him to be engaged in college math (in hindsight this may have been a mistake, difficult to say; but he has gone on to linear algebra and discrete math). If you take the away the things that hold them back, a lot of kids can do more than most realize.

Only worked with students 16 and older, but given the "infantilization" over the past 4 decades my two cents may apply. I'll start with parents:

Your student may lack discipline. Did you set boundaries and enforce them? Did you punish bad behavior (YES PUNISH) and make too much of expected behavior. Rewarding expected behavior is detrimental; exceptional behavior, of course, deserves reward/attention. Do you feed your kid sugar, caffeine, heavy carb loads? Does you kid get air, sun, exercise or are they getting "neuralized" in front of a screen 8 hours a day. Do you actually eat, talk, walk, dance, read, sing, pray, interact with your kid?

Teachers next:

Do you let the "offenders" see that you are "flustered"? Do you control your classroom or preach to it? Do you have any teaching talent or do you just drone on, throw material out there and expect them to be attentive? Was teaching your chosen "vocation" or is it a "job" that you fell into because you were "lost" and couldn't find your way in college. Do you truly believe in the the educational crap they made you take?

Finally schools:

Is their any discipline to back up the teachers (yes, I mean corporal). Have you eliminated distractions (toys, phones, electronic claptrap). Do you employ uniforms (excellent for camaraderie, pride and there are security advantages); uniforms also eliminate some, not all, socio-economic discord . . . extend the uniform to shoes and jewelry/makeup as well. Are your legal support willing to "go to the mat" if you are in the right . . . if not, what are you paying them for? Do the school psychologist, counselors, administrators have ANY REAL TEACHING EXPERIENCE? Are there tracked programs for students truly in need of special services or do you subscribe to the "mainstreaming" hokum?

Why

To achieve higher test scores using speed and to get bonuses and meet govt metrics

My understanding is that boys are more active and need more time to run around so they drug them to keep them quiet and immobile in their seats

A neighbor drugged his youngest son at the recommendation of the school the lasting effect is migraines so severe he is unable to work or hold a job.

Permanent damage

My dentist told the they called her into the school and told her it was IL State Law that her 4th grader had ADHD and had to be drugged

This was the school principal

She let them finish

then informed them she was a medical professional and would report them and take them to court if they tried it.

60-80 IQ will never be academic achievers or capable of much beyond rudimentary job skills.

All the speed and steak lunches won't change their genetics

William,

If a school deems that your 4th grader (or any other age) has ADHD...call an attorney.

Your school, school Principal, classroom teacher, etc., are not doctors.

Further, your child deserves to have privacy. If there have been FERPA violations, your child needs you to bring an attorney into the picture. You will be shocked when you see that Principal recant --immediately.

It's a shame more people trust articles without proper research. Yes, meds were over prescribed however ADHD is horrible for families and the children that have it. They are typically unable to function, unable to learn and incapable of socializing without meds. The meds can cause a dropout into an A student. They have been shown to retain the knowledge.

It was near impossible to get me to write the script but when I did it was not only necessary, it would have been child abuse not to give it.

Again, I do agree with 90% of your opinion. There are also too many vaccines and the Covid vaccines was pure evil for political and financial gain.

Allow me take it further. Statins have been shown to decrease lifespan in so many by increasing coronary calcification. In other words, I agree, we need more truthful studies, however your assumptions regarding all ADHD does not exist is dead wrong.

Drivel..

It turns out that the ineffective COVID shots were just the beginning.

Beginning, my ***, it was continuation.. how that statement relates to "beginning" anything is the fact that it's the lead off misnomer in the article, and sets the state of disbelief for a whole host of other erroneous conclusions.. To wit:

"the shot was developed quickly as a countermeasure to distract from the problem of a lab leak."

*****, the 'vaccine' was developed BEFORE the covid virus as a requirement for BLS-4 safety requirements.. before a human-toxic virus can be handled by a lab researcher, that researcher must be vaccinated against the virus. This wasn't possible back in the days where vaccines were derived from the virus - you have a chicken/egg paradox. BUT, now that we have the knowledge and experience to model and "engineer" viruses, we can also, using mRNA, engineer the theoretical "antidote" and develop that first, inoculate the researchers, and, at least on paper, comply with the requirement.

It usually take a year or more to produce, test and 'prove' a "vaccine", maybe 6 months if you're really pressed and cut some corners, so the question is, how did China's WIV lab file a patent application for a covid-19 mRNA vaccine in Feb of 2020 (which became the foundation of the Moderna vaccine patent 3 weeks later and the Pfizer vaccine patent not long after that..), when the Covid-19 virus was first

"sequenced" in December, 2019. The only way that was possible, and the only reason they would have it is if they were ***** with the virus in the lab already.

And the reason is because they were doing Peter Daszak's experiment to prove that they could stop a pandemic with a bioengineered mRNA vaccine. Daszak pitched the experiment to DARPA in 2017 as a bioweapon countermeasure, proposing to seed a remote population (South America somewhere) with a "harmless engineered virus" and then inoculate some of the exposed to demonstrate the concept validity, and DARPA replied with "*Not just no, but **** no!*"

So Pete decided to turn to the civilian market for funding, revamped the proposal to be a pandemic countermeasure instead of a bioweapon counter-measure, gave it to Fauci and the rest, as they say, is recent history.

When someone in the lab got exposed, and as we now know the vaccine doesn't prevent infection or transmission and so the virus was carried out into the community, and if they didn't know before they certainly discovered quickly this bitch wasn't harmless at all, so now you have no choice BUT to release the vaccine and try to save the ***** world.

And what the hell, all this really means is that instead of conducting 3rd-stage clinical trials in the lab before we proceed to test in the real world, we have no choice but to skip that **** and proceed to test the concept using the entire ***** planet as the test group which was where the whole bioengineering effort was hoped to end up eventually anyway, so the experiment is ON!

Once you realize that, then you can understand why alternative therapies for the virus (ivermectin, hydroxychloroquine, etc.) were verboten, because you're trying to gather data to prove it's the vaccine that arrests the virus, not other **** that is going to corrupt your "cure data".

But, what about all the people dying?

First, you need to understand the difference between health care and health science..

In health care, you lose a patient, it's a tragedy.

In health science, you lose a million patients in a pool of 8 billion, that's a fatality rate of 0.0125% and a statistical success (as long as you can demonstrate it's the vaccine that prevented that fatality rate being much higher).

Alas, the people in the "control group" (those of us that either refused, or didn't have access to the jab) had the very same fatality rate as those who got at least one jab, and actually were better (if you include jab side effects) than those who got two or more jabs. In other words the data demonstrated the vaccine couldn't be shown to do a damn thing positive for the inoculated.

That is why the statement : "the shot was developed quickly as a countermeasure to distract from the problem of a lab leak" is entirely ***** in assumption, construct and conclusion.

And, the original lab leak proved the jab was useless in the first place! They couldn't believe the lab was the source at first, because everyone was "inoculated". That premise quickly fell apart, too.

As for the rest of the article about ADHD, that is mere revelation that was public knowledge 30 years ago if anyone was paying attention, the only redeeming value of this article is reminding people what we already knew about "ADHD and medicating", were it not for the erroneous covid-related garbage up front as the led that taints the validity of everything that follows.

Before I "came to" several years ago I had been on anti anxiety meds. I never really bought into the whole anxiety thing as much as I liked them as a carryover from my college partying years. As I started to gain a foothold in the work force I got to a good position as a distribution manager for a very chaotic industry. It was fun and I was good at it but stress started to creep in so I went to a doctor after what I know now to be simply nerve issues for my shoulder. They gave me muscle relaxers and as it got worse I had a doctor give me opiates. Next thing I knew it was several years later and I was on clonazepam, Flexeril, hydrocodone, sertraline and Vyvanse. I was literally a walking speedball. I was holding it together okay but the covid thing woke me up big time. I was 100% against it and started reading and reading and then I got really serious about life. Stopped all of those medications, but it took about 6 months to a year to be 100% done with them. I then stopped smoking pot. Good grief I was a mess and had no idea, which was the scariest part about it. I thought I was okay for the most part. Now I'm at the gym 3 times a week and teaching my kids how to live life the proper way.

I always tell them it takes two parties to create a problem. Two things can be true at once. It was my fault and it was the industry praying on my vulnerabilities.

an organization that advocates for child rights against forced medicalization. Why would such a thing be needed? As it turns out, many if not most kids in public schools today face this threat daily. They can be identified as having ADHD or Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder.

It turns out that there is nothing proven chemically to constitute ADHD. It is entirely a diagnosis applied based on behavior as identified throughout a checklist questionnaire.*

My sister was attempting to medicalize me and diagnose "my problems." Mind you, I have a positive net worth, a BA in philosophy and Latin, have traveled the world as a service member in the US Army, as a university student, and as a retired adult. Almost perfect credit score.

Does the above make me perfect? No but it has grated on me, for some time, as to how she can apparently diagnose everyone she meets or interacts with as having some type of psychological or psychiatric disorder. Does my sister have a degree in Psychiatry or psychology? No. She has a residential house cleaning business. No shame in that but she certainly isn't qualified to diagnose random people based on personal interactions.

I blame Oprah and Dr. Phil and similar TV shows. Plenty of copy cats on YT, now, as well.

I stay far far away from doctors, of all kinds. Unless I'm bleeding out or have something broken or plugged up I don't go to doctors. I stopped viewing doctors as gods a long time ago.

Are you an Aldous Huxley fan? He wrote a nice bit on your last sentence.

"The real hopeless victims of mental illness are to be found among those who appear to be most normal. "Many of them are normal because they are so well adjusted to our mode of existence, because their human voice has been silenced so early in their lives, that they do not even struggle or suffer or develop symptoms as the neurotic does." They are normal not in what may be called the absolute sense of the word; they are normal only in relation to a profoundly abnormal society. Their perfect adjustment to that abnormal society is a measure of their mental sickness. These millions of abnormally normal people, living without fuss in a society to which, if they were fully human beings, they ought not to be adjusted."

I don't know if I agree with that. When I was in school (I graduated high school in 1965), there were almost no issues with kids of either sex being unable sit quietly in class and focus on the material that was being presented. You could walk through an entire grade school and hear a pin drop. Classrooms were silent. Grade school kids got three long recesses (morning, lunch, and afternoon), where they got lots of exercise outdoors, but they were expected to stay seated and be silent when in class.

From sixth grade on, I was in accelerated classes. My impression was that these kids were quite a bit better behaved than the "average" or slower kids. I think the reason for this was that academic stuff holds the attention of the more intelligent kids. Because they are proficient in reading, writing, and math, they'll settle in and do the work. Average and slower kids are unable to focus on their school work. Reading, writing, and math may present big challenges to them, so that they don't want to do work that is arduous for them and that they find tiring--and also maybe deflating, if they feel that they're failing at it.

Even in middle school (called junior high back then) and high school, most classrooms were silent, and the kids stayed seated. Sure, sometimes someone "acted out," but it was very rare. There was this one boy I went to school with who got in one fight (between 6th and 12th grade), and once silently mocked a teacher by making faces at him, until the teacher choked him till he nearly passed out. He grew up to be a lawyer. He's the only "naughty" one I can think of.

I'm not sure what changed, so that there are so many more troublesome kids.

History is going to prove that SSRI medications were responsible for the massive outbreaks of mental illness we have witnessed in younger individuals from the mid 1990s - present.

For instance, you never saw (for the large part) all these mass murder shooting sprees going on with youths under the age of 30 during prior decades.

Instead of parenting children and forcing them to learn how to cope our society decided to drug the kids up so Big Pharma could make $$$.

Just not true. Sorry.

I study this stuff a lot and I have yet to see any study that says that most of the 'shooters' are on or have been on SSRIs. It is pretty easy to come onto a website and parrot what you have heard around town but it is just not true.

These people have mental illness to begin with and, if they were prescribed psychotropic drugs, it is because they are mentally ill...not that the drugs caused mental illness. Serotonin reuptake-inhibitors have very little effectiveness except against chronic anxiety, which can lead to depression.

You are far more likely to associate your local Special Agent to mass shootings than you are SSRIs. I would appreciate it if you did a little research yourself and stop spouting a facile narrative that your neighbor told you over a cold beer.

Thank you.

Tucker is out of his lane again. He's so arrogant he'll write about anything using the 80/20 rule.

ADHD is way overdiagnosed (and way underdiagnosed)

Meds don't create hyperfocus in the ADHD brain type - they help those people be 'normal' (normie). Our current society demands normie behavior but could leave these people alone 150 years ago.

If you get addicted to adderal you were misdiagnosed.

Sure they use checklists but that's 1/3 of diagnosis. They are not going to cut a head open and count nerve fibers between the prefrontal cortex and hindbrain or measure action potential at the dopamine synapses.

The people suffering the worst from it are fuuucked because they can least manage the "controlled substances" regime.

A lot of criminals are untreated ADHD. We could mail them meds and reduce crime by 2/3 (but CIA needs to sell blackmarket drugs).

The best move would be to leave ADHD people alone without a Nanny State and let them be happy but here's the real secret:

They are the natural high-testosterone leaders who move our society forward towards freedom, peace and prosperity.

.gov does everything it can to beat them down and break their will in public schools and universities.

Because they threaten centralized power.

By not looking deeply enough, Tucker has become an ally of the Satanic cult that is at war with the adhd people.

What else is new.

I don't doubt these drugs are overprescribed to kids, If I stop using Ritalin for a week or so, I have no withdrawal symptoms whatsoever,, for me personally, Ritalin has been terrific at transcending the average state of semi focus/ light fog, for lack of a better way to describe it.

Dr. Savage also said:

"Now, the illness du jour is autism. You know what autism is? I'll tell you what autism is. In 99 percent of the cases, it's a brat who hasn't been told to cut the act out. That's what autism is. What do you mean they scream and they're silent? They don't have a father around to tell them, "Don't act like a moron. You'll get nowhere in life. Stop acting like a putz. Straighten up. Act like a man. Don't sit there crying and screaming, idiot."<sup>[105]</sup>

In July 2008, Savage said that the increasing rate of autism diagnoses was the result of "a racket" designed to get disability payments for "poorer families who have found a new way to be parasites on the government."<sup>[104]</sup>

Do we really need to ask why they're drugging students? Might as well ask why are they drugging the military (current suicide crisis), or screening pregnant women for mental illness, or "Teenscreen" - screening kids at school for a mental illness and diagnosing them all with their DSM - totally made up diagnoses. They choose them by a show of hands. A former Harvard alumnus stated 2/3rds of the students are on psych drugs (article in the European Conservative.. And you wonder what is happening to America.

It's because psychiatry is quack science to begin with. There is nothing right or wrong with behavior. There's just behaviors you like or don't like. People get referred to a psychiatrist because they demonstrate behaviors certain people don't like. There's nothing medically wrong with them. They're not "head cases". They have no medical ailment. And because they have no medical ailment, these psychiatrists are not medical doctors. They're not treating anything. They're drugging you because they don't like you because of what society says is wrong.

I took care of a kid with autism for years. He didn't have medical ailment. He was a kid that didn't communicate well with others. That made it inappropriate for him to be in certain social situations. But he didn't need a quack doctor drugging him his whole life.

A government employee doesn't like your child's behavior so they suggest you drug them into compliance. And a quack doctor agrees

Yes, except: ADHD drugs are not narcotics. They don't put you into a woozy fugue with nice daydreams. They are STIMULANTS, like cocaine and meth. Like cocaine and meth they make it possible to go without sleep for a day or so while working on a high-stress project, or to work 12-hour days for five days and then sleep all weekend. You know, just the kind of performance that many well-paid jobs in our demented modern world demand, because corporations really wish they didn't have to rely on humans at all and had machines to do that.

Modern schools are designed to prepare modern workers for modern jobs, as demanded by corporate overlords. They always were, going back to the origins of the public school movement. Giving children meth so that they can perform as demanded is just another facet of offices where the coffee is always strong and full, and the boss expects you to answer your phone any time of the day or night. It could even be connected to the economic shift from industrial production to office work, with individuals who would otherwise be poorly-suited for labor in the office sweatshop being given drugs so as to raise the number of suitable employees and keep wages down. Certainly, most "cases" are identified by teachers who despair of dealing with children who won't follow the rules necessary to control too many kids in a confined space. But again, public schools have always been about preparing The Workforce. The fact that there is money to be made merely assures that there will be permanent advocacy from those who profit thereby.

Canoe in the Desert 17 hours agoremove | link

People are drugged to control them better. That's why so many dystopian novels (Brave New World, This Perfect Day, THX 1138) feature mandatory drug regimes. "Drug evasion" is a crime, and the protagonists of such stories achieve their freedom by refusing to take their prescribed drug regimens. When our elders are finally committed to "convalescent homes", they are invariably fed psychotropic drugs, often without their permission or even knowledge. I suppose in the forthcoming medical dictatorship, basic civil rights will be denied to anyone who refuses State-mandated drugs and "vaccines."

While I agree that the focus should be on modifying the environment to fit the children rather than trying to change the kids to fit an unnatural environment, ADHD does exist. I refused medication for years and refused multiple times to have my children take ADHD medication. But I was convinced by my adult daughter to give Adderall a try a couple of years ago at 50 and it really does help. One major indication if the medication is really needed is if it makes you sleepy when starting or upping the dose (paradoxical response), which is very pronounce for me. Before trying Adderall, I was self mediating. Once starting the meds, I had no problem going off everything else even though I'd been using regularly for over a couple of decades. It was just that I didn't need it anymore. Restless is a little different for me. I don't have anyone telling me when I have to sit still or when I can pace. But Adderall makes me much less likely to decide at 3AM that I'd like to be on the other side of the country (while sober). So while widely over-diagnosed, it does exist. I probably have a bit of autism, speech issues, dyslexia and who knows what else, so that may complicate. But at this point I insist the world adjusts to me, otherwise have fun finding someone else who can do what I can.

I wanted to add that part of what I've been doing at work is making the original clinical trial data for Adderall available to the research community. If you're a legit researcher you can find the data on Vivli. I have oversight of data anonymization at a major pharma and am doing my best to expand external data sharing within the industry. I plan to convince my company to release all clinical trial data to the research community immediately after reporting to the FDA. I am also publicly releasing a tool I've developed to make anonymization easier. The hope is that other companies will follow (they don't like to look bad in comparison to their competition) and I hope it will make it more difficult for them to hide negative results if the research community is expecting to see that data. Maybe not realistic but at least the FBI won't stop me this time.

I can personally attest that ADHD is a real phenomenon. Is it a problem? Hard to say. It certainly is in some cases. My guess is that it evolved as one of our personality "types" over millions of years because it's useful. I'm bad at paying attention to some things, but freakishly good at paying attention to others. You wouldn't want a whole platoon or research group of me, but if you have one or two, it would be a real advantage.

Not sure about the drug thing, but the two people I personally know of decided to discontinue them. (They felt that the side effects were worse than the condition.)

Most behavioral 'disorders' (and some use that term very loosely...) have to do with an imbalance of serotonin, dopamine, norepinephrine and cortisol. Neurochemicals can be rebalanced, most of the time fairly easily, using amino acids and herbs.

There's no money in that, though.

Back in the day, the adolescent behavioral disorders were cured with repeated application of pain to the gluteus maximus by parents, and later by peers to the head and shoulders as necessary, which in all but the most severe cases served to acceptably rebalance the serotonin, dopamine, norepinephrine and cortisol naturally.

Even most with "mental illness" have enough cognition to eventually associate repeated applications of pain with certain activities and learn to "keep their mouths shut" and/or "not do that" any more to avoid experiencing it. In the vast experience of daily life, that is acceptable socialization.

Those that don't have that learning ability will inevitably demonstrate that drugs don't help matters much either.

Oh, believe me, ADHD is REAL! Our youngest granddaughter is a force of nature that is training everyone in her area of influence on a daily basis how to deal with her. At 3 years old there is no sitting still for meals, in restaurants, forget church and any other gathering family or otherwise. She came with this behavior built-in derived from her father who is exactly the same way which is why he's back in prison where he belongs. We have no plans to drug her into submission but look at this as a problem we all will have to learn to deal with over the years. We're hoping with half the genes of her father and a HELLuvalot of love we can help her deal with her impulses and direct them in a way that will be beneficial to all. Dr. Dobson needs to add another chapter to his "The Strong Willed Child" book and put her name at the top of it. If you look up the audio recordings of the mothers that have gone through life with one of these kids on Dobson's site you'll know it's no small thing that's controlled by "Time Outs" and other b.s.

Well that certainly isn't happening so let's talk about something that exists in our real World. She is going through Speech Therapy since she isn't speaking as clearly as most 3 year olds. Her hearing has been checked out and it's fine. Watching her mind going ninety-to-nothing all the time and watching her go from one idea to the next can be a fascinating observation. The problem is she can be absolutely diabolical sometimes. Especially when it's late in the day and she's tired, we're tired and she knows it. We just have to wait until she hits her brick wall and goes to sleep - hopefully after she's had a bath. In the mornings she'd push our daughter to tears trying to get her dressed and then when our daughter would sit down and cry THAT'S when she would come up to her, pat her on her knee and say "That's ok, Mommy. It's ok." - and then she'd let our daughter get her dressed. The kid's a genius in manipulation as many kids are at that age but she takes it to a different level that I've never seen in our family.

I've been searching for a good thread to share my Adderal story. 45 year old male. I was prescribed it in the 7th grade and was on and off it till I was 41. In between that time I was addicted to the point that adderal ran my life. Looking back being sober I wish my parents were more strict on me with my schooling and would have done just fine.

Worst of all I have developed a disease called RLS that I truly believe came from my addiction to adderal. The dopamine levels in my brain are depleted and the only way I can sleep at night is to take 3 mg of Roprinerol which is a drug for Parkinson's disease.

I got lucky with a wife that has stuck with me. My kids will never be allowed any where near that drug. They have learned discipline for their school work and a biblical doctrine with a paddle has put them at the top of their classes.

There is so much more I can say but the bottom line is keep your kids away from amphetamine alike drugs.

"Some one in three adults are taking psychiatric meds." WTF? I presume the author is referring to the great state(s) of the U.S.A.

Unlike vaccine companies, the producers were not indemnified against payouts for harms, and as much as $50 billion ended up going to victims just last year. The numbers are mind-boggling."

I believe the author meant to write $500 million. $49.5 billion went to lawyers. That's a scandal that's equally catastrophic in American society.

I feel just like you do! My family says I am a conspiracy nut but I went down that rabbit hole because of Covid. I see exactly what you mean about boys and kids in general in our crappy school system. I worked in the school system for several years. We had grade school kids on meds, you could smell it on the breath and see just how out of it they were. I thought even then about how bad the parents were to drug their kids. I worked as a teachers aide. When we came back from the Covid lock down, the kids were placed in the lunch room at the long tables instead of their classrooms. They were spaced as you might imagine, they had their computer in front of them. My task was to walk around the room and keep the kids focused on their work, not talk to their neighbor and keep their mask on. I lasted 2 days and quit! We had 5 and 6 year olds crying, they did not understand...sickening! Parents should sue the damn districts and the Governors.

A while back 2022? I read a report, testing began on the mRNA vaxx in 2014, written by one of the participants. He said only 4 of 500 were still alive. *****? I guess we'll find out.

Steeley 22 hours ago
(Edited)remove | link

The covid inoculation was not the first mRNA 'vaccine' experimentation and yes the early versions were not at all promising. As it stands so far, there STILL is no data that shows the mRNA vaccines work.

This is because mRNA exposes the immune system to viral infection behavior (proteins produced during replication), leaving the immune system dependent on infection and replication of the virus in order to trigger an immune response, where actual vaccines are made from actual viruses that have been depreciated (rendered incapable of replicating, dead, or otherwise harming the host), so the immune system is trained to recognize the virus upon appearance, rather than have to wait until it infects, replicates, and starts producing the proteins that the mRNA inoculation trained the immune system to recognize.

By the time the virus is replicating, the host is now shedding (contagious) and it takes a day or two for the immune system to ramp up (as opposed to 4-6 days for an unvaxxed unexposed person typically). A properly vaxxed immune system recognizes the virus almost immediately and is attacking it before or as it begins replicating and shuts it down, typically without any symptoms of infection.

Here's the fun stuff.. the only way a properly vaccinated (or previously exposed) host can find out if they are/were infected is with a PCR test which will pick up the virus or the dead remnants of the virus..

And they will test POSITIVE for the virus, even if they are not "sick". The PCR test can't tell live from dead, nor give a good indication of viral load except by the number of cycles that had to be performed before a positive detection occurred, and nobody knows what the actual viral load threshold is for anybody before they actually start showing symptoms and/or the immune system's progress in dealing with it.

Which is why the creator of the PCR test said this was a lab tool, and should never be used for diagnostics.

And so of course, we consider the PCR test the "Gold Standard" for viral diagnostics! 🤪

Why are they Drugging the Students?

Because the House Wives are all on something and they need more customers.

Drugs are inflation proof. Something like a Bannana or Cheese burger has tons of economic inputs where drug and alcohol production are dirt cheap and expensive because cartel operations or restrictive sin taxes. If you keep the price of drugs low and normal stuff high people will gravitate towards that. Getting people to blow discretionary income on drugs actually lowers inflation.

Its been seen at the end of extremely intense wars that much of the population are rationed drugs like Pervatin or Captagon to keep them focused, sedated or stave off hunger. We are running a war economy to keep this ***** illusion going and the Ozempic house wife has been seen before. Hitler and ISIS knew what the girls needed. Not like Sackler the *** bastard.....

If Britney Spears wants to get her sh** together, she should take 20 of her closest friends and all of the natural food items they need for the next six months to a remote island. Turn off their wi-fi, streaming devices and build healthy relationships while eating as nature intended. She is a generational talent that has been haunted and poisoned into her current state. All of these electronic geegaws, social media and ultraprocessed foods have destroyed millions of lives. She could be the prototype on how to get your life back from the carnival barkers hawking this garbage at all levels of society.

Right, I don't really know.

Friends of mine have 6 kids of which 2 have been diagnosed with ADHD (one) and ADD (the other) when they were 6 and 7. We were pretty skeptical of their parenting skills in the beginning and thought that the problem was a lack of discipline with these two, but the bouts of incredible rage they would get into for any minimal thing, the suddenly lying in the middle of a road refusing to budge because they don't want to walk anymore, and all the constant screaming and fighting with each other were obviously out of this world, mostly compared with the other 4 kids of which 2 are quite close in age. That house was basically constant screaming and crying from these boys from morning to evening. There was nothing at all whatsoever that was possible to do about it. Discipline would not work at all and would just make it worse, reasoning would not work at all, and you could obviously not just leave them in the middle of a road busy with traffic laying to teach them a lesson. There was no lesson to be learnt with these two.

And then they got medication and behold, in two weeks they became like brand new boys. Not zombies, just normal boys like their siblings or like any other normal child.

So yeah... Sometimes.

"It turns out that there is nothing proven chemically to constitute ADHD. It is entirely a diagnosis applied based on behavior as identified throughout a checklist questionnaire. The checklist is about fidgeting, forgetting, boredom, finishing tasks, various acting up, expressions of frustrations, and so on."

Real dyslexia exists but is extremely rare. By the 1990s, 'dyslexia' was an excuse for not being able to read. Now, dyslexia has been replaced by 'Attention Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder' (uncontrollable behavior that teachers don't want to deal with).

Why Are They Drugging The Students?

Because the magical power of vaccines and the amounts given to them when they were young because ALL public schools required them or they were not allowed to attend. All the physical and mental problems they got from the myriad of vaccines with their magical powers were by design so those vaccine makers could "fix" all the problems their vaccines caused. Pretty brilliant, eh? Sorta like one of the things the jabs created for the first time was myocarditis in perfectly healthy kids and wouldn't you know it? Right on cue the jab makers have the juice to treat those kids. IT'S SCIENCE!!!

The author writes: "

The world's population was held hostage for a year and more while the inoculation was rolled out. But once deployed, it became obvious that it could not actually block infection or stop the spread. So everyone got the bug anyway, and we are left with tremendous damage caused by the shots themselves."

It's important to remember that the shots were always marketed by professionals as a way to avoid serious illness, not to block. COVID infection. While Biden dids important to consider official sources like NIH and FDA, which have consistently advised that the shots are meant to deter serious COVID illness and avoid hospitalization.

That's a lie. Early on we were explicitly told that "if you get the vaccine, you will not get or transmit Covid." That was the whole supposed basis for mandating it, "you have to get it for everyone else". It was only later after it was clear that it did nothing to stop transmission that they changed the storyline to "prevents serious illness ", and even that was a lie.

If anything, the "vaccine" zombies were MORE susceptible than the unvaccinated. Covid makes the spike protein in small amounts. mrna converts the immune system into a spike protein factory. Remember, all the test animals DIED.

For those with a real disorder, the drugs are a solution... but as with so many things of late the lines are blurred just like so many people jumping onto the autism bandwagon whilst being perfectly normal and able to manage well in life.

Too many people have jumped onto the bandwagon for no good reason, no doubt pharma is all to willing to bang out the pills for the demand.
