I don't think anyone thinks they are "better"

Not only do I think I'm better, I actually know I'm better. And that statement isn't some egotistical rant by a self-deluded incel. I literally demonstrate it every day through measurable metrics (and non-quantifiable metrics). I willingly admit that a few — very few — are superior to me, but at least we are of the same White species, and I am more than willing to learn from them. (As any real human would do.) My species has a track record of being superior. This can objectively be proven by simply looking at all other species attempts at emulating the White species or at the very least parasitically feeding off of it.

I definitely know that I am superior to any dimwit, subhuman, *-skin species whose members have never created anything meaningful in their entire existence. I certainly am not going to virtue signal some meaningless, hebrew-based  about "all men being created equal". Anyone who believes such tripe is simply someone who self-admittedly knows they are inferior, and hence deserves to be treated as such.

A selection event is upon us all. There is no escape — even in death. Those who choose to embrace the course set out by Creation will prosper and chart a new course for humans. Those who dwell in meaningless drivel about the "fellowship of man" will simply be eradicated. Universe gives no *****.
