

willisjr 1 hour agoremove | link

I concur with your statement.

I have always admired those great minds who advanced math, technology & applied the Scientific Method to advance our horizons and better understand the Universe (e.g. Galileo Galilei, Isaac Newton, Leonhard Euler, Nikola Tesla etc.)

However, given the current state of "civilization", I think ANY real scientific knowledge best NOT be discovered will be misused or mis-applied.

- Internet technologies originally meant to share information freely & broadly turned into an instrument of tyrannical surveillance, propaganda and/or censorship of the masses.

- bio-tech & medical advances became corrupted into nonsensical "vaccine" mandates and mass genocide and Crimes Against Humanity on a global scale

- new food technologies becomes twisted into GMO and other (intentional?) poison foods which impact all humans as well as the next generation

- new particles of matter will no doubt be militarized and made into newer & more powerful weapons of mass destruction.... just as the cracking of the atom did for our "civilization" at the turn of the new century.

NOTHING Good will come out of a twisted human mind with no foundation in morals, no matter how brilliant the technical achievement is.