Yuval Harari is best known as a globalist “philosopher” or “guru” closely tied to the World Economic Forum. He is infamous for his Ted Talks and summit speeches declaring the coming abandonment of personal individualism and independence while elevating AI as the harbinger of a new technological religion. He joyously preaches about the fusion of AI technology with the human body to give certain elitist groups the power of “gods.” His notions of the supposedly infinite abilities of algorithms to influence culture and politics are so overblown they enter into the realm of children’s fantasy.

I mention Harari often in my work because I believe he is a kind of litmus test for the true intentions of globalists. He’s a lot like Henry Kissinger in his New World Order zealotry – He has a hard time keeping his mouth shut about the greater agenda and this works to our advantage. If you really want to know what the elites plans are, look up past discussions by true believers like Harari. When they start preaching their dark gospel they can barely control themselves.

Harari’s writings are replete with calls for digital authoritarianism and global government. I examined his power-obsessed philosophy and his moral relativism last year in my article ‘Governance By Artificial Intelligence: The Ultimate Unaccountable Tyranny.’

It’s important to understand that Harari’s ideology is common among the globalists and the only thing I can accurately describe it as is “Luciferianism” – A narcissistic belief system that claims CERTAIN human beings can become gods and should be worshiped as gods. Harari and many globalists seem to think AI is their ticket to godhood. I would compare them to the corrupt high priests of ancient cultures like the Aztecs who used their secret knowledge of mathematics and the movements of the planets to predict solar eclipses and terrify the peasants into compliance. AI is the new solar eclipse; the great serpent eating the sun.

Combine this corruption with elitist desires for a one-world government and you can see the incredible danger here.

In his book 'From Animals into Gods: A Brief History of Humankind' in a passage that has recently been removed from newer additions, Harari says this:

"As the twenty-first century unfolds, nationalism is fast losing ground. More and more people believe that all of humankind is the legitimate source of political authority, rather than the members of a particular nationality, and that safeguarding human rights and protecting the interests of the entire human species should be the guiding light of politics. If so, having close to 200 independent states is a hindrance rather than a help. Since Swedes, Indonesians and Nigerians deserve the same human rights, wouldn't it be simpler for a single global government to safeguard them?"

(From Animals into Gods: A Brief History of Humankind (2012), p. 244

Keep in mind that when Harari talks about "human rights" he is referring to human desires. He has stated on numerous occasions that he believes freedom and individuality are fantasies, constructs of the mind with no importance in the real world. For globalists, "human rights" are special privileges used as leverage to buy popular compliance. They are a gift from government, not a gift from God.

In the past couple of years Harari has suddenly shifted his rhetoric and argues that global government is not the ideal. He also talks about AI as a danger that needs to be contained by bureaucracy rather than a deity that needs to be worshiped. I suspect this is because there has been a sea change in public awareness since 2012 and now he has to be more careful about how he talks in the media. I have been working within the Liberty Movement since 2006 and I can say with some authority that many MILLIONS more people are aware of the threats posed by globalism today compared to 2012. This puts the globalist agenda in peril.

With the failure of the pandemic lockdowns I think the power brokers have been left stunned. This was clearly their big play to get the global governance they have long lusted after and it fell apart. Attempting to induce mass fear over a virus that 99.8% of the population would easily survive did not work out well for them.

Everything was riding on medical tyranny: They thought they were going to get vaccine passports which would have given them total economic control of the populace. They thought they were going to introduce CBDCs (digital currencies) and create a cashless society. They thought they were going to leverage the covid lockdowns into perpetual "climate lockdowns." They got nothing and their agenda was fully exposed. The patriot movement in the US has exploded in popularity in response and now they have millions more rebels to contend with in the future.

In response to their failure, many of the prominent names during the lockdowns have faded into the background.

- Klaus Schwab from the WEF was EVERYWHERE during covid; now he is gone.
- Anthony Fauci has slipped into obscurity.

- Authoritarian leaders like New Zealand's Jacinda Ardern have stepped out of the political limelight. Where did they go?

I think they know what's coming. I think they fear a populist backlash, a rising of torches and pitchforks, and they are going into hiding.

This is where we must address the issue of Donald Trump and how he is viewed by the globalists...

In light of the recent assassination attempt on Donald Trump I think it's important to revisit the long running globalist narrative on the "world order" and Trump's position as scapegoat for any and all calamities that befall it.

Their primary assertion is that any movement that values national interests over global centralization is an evil movement that must be suppressed or destroyed. This very rhetoric has permeated leftist political organizations (including Joe Biden's administration) and the corporate media; it is being used as a justification for subterfuge and extreme violence against conservatives.

In an interview earlier this year, Harari suggested that the return of Donald Trump would mean the "death of the global order." He then gaslights, claiming that there is no fight between nationalism and globalism and that the idea of a "globalist conspiracy" is entirely a fabrication of populist movements. These people truly expect us to forget the censorship and oppression they attempted during covid.

What I find most interesting is Harari's take on the next few years, in which he offers what I would interpret as a thinly veiled threat. He argues that war is coming on an expansive scale unless nationalists (defenders of sovereignty) end their rebellion and return to "order" (the centralized control of the globalists). He ties this threat directly to Donald Trump.

The thing is, Trump is just a reflection of a larger movement against the globalist regime. Getting rid of Trump would change nothing. In fact, getting rid of Trump might make the populace commit to full bore revolution even faster. And, if it ultimately turns out that Trump doesn't benefit the cause of freedom from the elites, that same revolution will eventually happen without him.

I have my own concerns about Trump, primarily what kinds of people he will place in his cabinet. But I have long said that above all else Trump is the most likely scapegoat for an international collapse that the GLOBALISTS CREATED. They set the stage for these crisis events by encouraging economic instability and geopolitical conflicts (Ukraine being one of many). I don't see any globalists vying for legitimate peace. I do see them pushing to escalate various conflicts into WWII.

The trick is, by blaming Trump they think that all conservatives and "nationalists" will be blamed by extension. It's an obvious but somewhat clever ploy; by making conservatives into the villains behind a planetary catastrophe the elites can deflect suspicion while operating with impunity in the future.

Anyone who questions them can simply be labeled as "nationalist terrorists" as history is rewritten.

But is the "death of the global order" really a bad thing? I would say that it is only a negative if the globalists are left alive to continue to manipulate the chaos that follows. The real culprits behind war and economic collapse should be punished. They should be removed from power, imprisoned or done away with forever. Bottom line? The globalists need to go if real peace and order is ever to be established.
